

The Analysis on the Causes and Remedies of Criminal Suspects' Fluke Mind

Xia jinming

People's Public Security University of China ,Beijing, China

ABSTRACT: With the deepening of China's reform and opening up process, China's laws have gradually begun to conform to international standards. During the interrogation process, criminal suspects have the right to remain silent, creating an opportunity for the emergence of fortunate psychology. The existence of forgiveness during the interrogation process will make our situation very unfavorable. Therefore, investigators must deeply explore the causes of their forgiveness during the interrogation of criminal suspects and take targeted measures Method of interrogation so that it is not self-defeating.

KEYWORDS: criminal suspects; interrogation; psychological forgiveness; correction

1. Introduction

According to the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights of the United Nations, criminal suspects have the right to remain silent during interrogation processes. Since the laws and regulations of China have been geared to the international standards gradually, criminal suspects in China have been taken chances to evade their culpability, which contributes to fluke mind and increases the difficulty for interrogation. In order to speed up the interrogation process and raise the efficiency of case solving, investigators must be able to accurately master the psychology of criminal suspects, understand the original intention of fluke mind, and make use of interrogation strategies to break through suspects' psychological line of defense, thereby obtaining valuable information.

2. Reasons for Suspects' Chance

Forgiveness is a potential state of mind that "this situation will never happen" or "can be completely avoided by some means". Not every criminal suspect has the forgiveness that can successfully escape legal sanctions This psychological state usually occurs before the suspect commits a criminal act. During the interrogation of the criminal suspect, its fortunate psychology will also change accordingly, and the failed interrogation strategy will even aggravate the suspect. The psychology of forgiveness has caused the interrogation process to become more complicated and tortuous. In order to break the psychology of forgiveness of criminal suspects and successfully obtain the results of interrogation, public security agencies must fully grasp the causes and characteristics of the psychology of forgiveness.

2.1 Experience of successfully escaping censorship from public security organs

Some criminal suspects may have been reviewed by public security organs for illegal crimes. However, due to various reasons, they have successfully escaped crimes, so a mindset has emerged. When they are reviewed again by the public security organs, they believe that they can still escape the trial of the law. Fortunately, psychology is strong.

2.2 Underestimated the detection capacity of public security organs

Some criminals cherish a kind of gratefulness that can be confused. They believe that public security agencies will be constrained by the shortage of personnel and the shortage of funds for handling cases, and will concentrate their police forces on the detection of a few serious and major cases. Opportunities become the fish of the net. At present, there are few criminals who are skeptical about the detection ability of public security organs, but they still exist among some criminals who have rich criminal experience and think that their crimes are more sophisticated. In addition, some High IQ criminals engaged in medical, computer and other industries have more serious doubts about the ability of public security organs to break through. They have strong confidence in their IQ and ability to escape, and they can pass through. This method makes accurate judgments on the case handling ability, case handling experience, and sense of responsibility of the case handlers. After clarifying the details of the other party, he repeatedly argues about his criminal behavior. The attitude is very bad and the arrogance is very arrogant.

2.3 The criminal suspect has a solid social status and network of relationships

Some criminal suspects have a relatively stable social status, have strong confidence in the relationship network they have established over the years, and firmly believe that they can "move up the case" by using money and other means, so they have a strong sense of forgiveness.

2.4 Pretending to be a crime

Due to the rapid and detailed reporting of criminal cases by public media such as the Internet and newspapers, as well as the emergence of a large number of film and television dramas involving crime and criminal investigation, the anti-surveillance knowledge that criminals can master has also become more and more abundant. Before carrying out criminal activities, it will take a long-term detailed plan to carefully design the details of the criminal process. For example, some criminals will carefully disguise their faces, figures, fingerprints, footprints, etc., in an attempt to hide their identity.

2.5 Evidence of Breaking Crime

Some criminals have certain criminal experience or judicial knowledge, and have a clearer understanding of the importance of criminal evidence in the determination of crimes. They know that cases without important evidence such as stolen money, stolen goods, and murder weapons cannot be transferred to the procuratorate for prosecution. At the stage, the confession of the criminal suspect alone is not enough to finalize the case, so these criminals will destroy the relevant criminal evidence after the execution of the criminal act, creating opportunities for themselves to escape the trial of the law.

2.6 Forming offensive and defensive alliances with co-convicts

Some of the co-criminals may have relatively close relatives or have known each other for many years, and have a deep emotional foundation, so they firmly believe that they can be tight-lipped and that informed relatives and friends will not actively send them out. Such criminals believe that as long as they refuse to intervene. If they do not plead guilty, investigators will not be able to grasp their criminal evidence. They establish offensive and defensive alliances in advance, agree on countermeasures after arrest, and try to cover up criminal acts in an attempt to fool through the border.

2.7 Determining that investigators did not have evidence of their crimes

Some investigators with inexperience in handling cases may expose the fact that they do not have enough criminal evidence in the process of interrogating criminal suspects, and some criminals will make the criminal evidence useless by finding suitable reasons. If after multiple interrogations are conducted on the criminal suspect, the interrogator still only talks about legal policies, and generally asks the criminal suspect to take the initiative to explain the facts of the crime, but does not produce favorable evidence, and even the issues raised do not involve criminal acts. The key to this is that all kinds of signs can enable the suspect to judge that the police have not possessed strong evidence of his crime, which has caused the suspect to have a strong sense of forgiveness.

2.8 Intimidation of victims and witnesses

Criminals and their associates or relatives are very likely to intimidate victims and witnesses related to the case before and after the criminals are arrested. Victims or witnesses who fear retaliation or receive money from criminals may refuse to provide cases. Evidence. Similar situations have repeatedly appeared in case investigations, which has brought a strong sense of forgiveness to criminal suspects' escape from legal sanctions.

2.9 Cases where the confession is decisive

Criminals in cases of rape, bribery, poisoning and homicide often have strong forgiveness. Suspects in rape, especially those who have known the victim in the first place, tend to be tricked into adultery, so the forgiveness is more serious. The criminal process of bribery and bribery is one-on-one, as long as both the bribe and the bribe refuse to plead guilty, or the briber still refuses to plead guilty if the bribe confesses, The end result of sci-fi is likely to be left behind due to lack of sufficient evidence. Similar situations exist in cases of poisoning and homicide.

2.10 I think I can no longer avoid legal liability but insist on refusing to plead guilty

Some criminals are very aware of the seriousness of their crimes, but they cannot psychologically bear the legal consequences of this, so they try to avoid legal sanctions through "no confession".

3. Remedies of fluke mind

3.1 Production of strong criminal evidence

Public security organs can directly present strong criminal evidence to criminal suspects who believe that the public security organs do not have evidence of their crimes, and directly combat their forgiveness. What's more, investigators should also trick criminals to believe that key evidences have been mastered to fight against criminals' fluke mind.

3.2 Hitting criminals psychologically by showing the determination and strength of solving the case

For the criminal suspects who have already destroyed criminal evidences, bribed or threatened victims and witnesses, or the ones who are doubtful about the case solving ability of the policy due to various reasons, the investigators could show their determination to solve these cases as well as their investment in manpower, material resources and financial resources. What's more, investigators should also trick criminals to believe that key evidences have been mastered to fight against criminals' fluke mind.

3.3 Dismantling the suspect's offensive and defensive alliance from the inside

The interrogator should carefully observe the contradictions between the criminal suspects during the interrogation of the criminal suspects who believe that they have established a solid offensive and defensive alliance with the co-accused, whether before or after the crime is committed, Contradictions or contradictions in the criminal process can be a powerful weapon to disintegrate the offensive and defensive alliance from the inside. When necessary, investigators can also proactively create contradictions for criminal suspects and create conditions for their "revolutionary". Interrogation In the process, investigators can also encourage criminal suspects to make full use of a certain problem. The more lies the more meticulous the better, so as to discover the loopholes of the offensive and defensive alliance and make a centralized breakthrough, which can often have unexpected results.

3.4 Interrogators being equipped with professional skills and excellent psychological quality

The professional skill level and the psychological quality of interrogators will directly affect the psychological states and the confession behaviors of criminal suspects. If interrogators lack responsibility, interrogation skills and interrogation strategies, they are likely to encourage criminal suspects to create fluke mind, which will finally put interrogators in a bad position.

In recent years, due to the low professional skill level, weak legal awareness and low psychological quality of some investigators, they are investigated and affixed legal liability from time to time since criminal suspects have been extorted confession. Hence, interrogators must perfect their knowledge structures through constant learning firstly. They should arm themselves by learning culture, theories and social knowledge, hitting criminals psychologically through their professional knowledge of politics, laws and interrogation. Moreover, they should practice themselves positively to improve their professional skill level. The clerk for interrogations should try their utmost to equip themselves with keen observation, highly centralized attentiveness, rich associative strength and flexible thinking ability through practice, and make full use of these abilities in practice as well. In addition, interrogators also need to be familiar with and apply necessary psychological knowledge, and improve their psychological quality in practice, so that they could strictly control the psychological state of the suspects. As a result, interrogators could firmly grasp the initiative in interrogations and give no chance for criminal suspects to create any fluke mind.

4. Conclusion

In the process of interrogating criminal suspects, the suspect's fortunate psychology can hinder the criminal confession of the criminal suspects, adversely affect the investigation of the truth, and can also be a psychological breakthrough for the criminal suspects. To facilitate the criminal suspect to make a truthful statement of the facts of the crime. Whether the process of interrogating the criminal suspect is directly related to factors such as the person's own business ability and psychological quality, so the interrogator should strive to achieve self Improve, and accumulate rich experience in the practice of interrogation, thereby improving the efficiency of case detection.

References

- [1] Yuan Guozhong (2018). Discussion on the Cause and Correction of the Vicious Psychology of Criminal Suspects. Legality Vision, no.18, pp.103-104.
- [2] Zhang weinan (2016). The performance and characteristic analysis of the fluke psychology of criminal suspect in interrogation. Legality Vision, no.34, pp.277-278
- [3] Zheng shojiang (2019). Construction and Practice of Investigation and Interrogation Mode of "Combined Investigation and Investigation": A Case Study of Jiaxing Public Security Bureau. Public Security Science Journal(Journal of Zhejiang Police College), no.2, pp.31-36.
- [4] Song Gang (2017). Review strategies for refinancing in the approval process. People's Procuratorate. People's Procuratorial Semimonthly, no.24, pp.67-68.
- [5] Lu Jia (2019). Psychological characteristics and interrogation of criminal suspects in cases of economic crime. Journal of Guizhou Police Officer Vocational College, vol,31, no.3,pp.85-91
- [6] Zhou Lei (2017). Psychological characteristics and interrogation strategies of drug suspects. Journal of Yunnan Police College, no.4, pp.54-60.